Toys For Tots Has a Very Successful Year!

Thank you all who brought toys or contributed a check or money for Toys For Tots. We collected $250.00 in checks and cash from the members and with the board again matching up to $250.00 we were able to give the Marines a check for $500.00 and 2 boxes of toys. This year as in other years, an invitation was extended to the Marine representatives to join us at our Christmas party dinner. They enjoyed the food and talking to the members. It was a pleasure having them join us this year. We'll extend an invitation again next year. While talking to them, they said that the Marines do the collecting and buying of toys and that the Salvation Army does the distributing. Over 280,000 toys are collected and distributed to 110,000 children of families less fortunate. Each year Toys For Tots is getting bigger and now covers a 10 county area in southeastern Wis. Again thanks to all who made this another great year blessing and bringing joy to many children. Hope everyone has a great holiday season!

Dave and Pat Halter

Congratulations to Dan Laska

The Fish-In results have been changed to show a new winner. Dan Laska while in Kayak Fishing, WI, caught the Largest Brown Trout in the June Fish-In. His fish also won the Largest Brown Trout for the season. We hope to see Dan at the Awards Banquet on March 31st.

Lake Michigan updates

Are we stocking the right number of salmon?

Five years ago the four states on Lake Michigan agreed to cut lakewide chinook stocking by 25%. Most of that reduction was in Michigan, but the cut in Wisconsin was also substantial – 21% starting in 2006. The lakewide reduction was successful in its intended purpose of assuring the stability of the salmon forage base, especially alewives. This is in contrast with Lake Huron, where naturally reproduced chinook flooded the system in the early years of this decade and depleted the alewife population.

Today, while the chinook fishery of Lake Huron has collapsed, the Lake Michigan program remains strong. Wisconsin fisheries managers are especially pleased to note that Chinook and Coho salmon taken by Wisconsin anglers in 2011 were large and robust. This is now: Along with fisheries managers and the interested public in Michigan, Indiana, and Illinois, we have initiated a formal process of reviewing salmon and trout stocking policy in Lake Michigan.

Salmon stamp expenditure report.

We recently completed a summary of expenditures of Salmon Stamp revenues for the fiscal years 2006 through 2011. Total expenditures for the salmon and trout program were a little over $3M each year, with about half of that coming from Salmon Stamp revenues. Call to request a copy or find the report on line at:
http://dnr.wi.gov/fish/lakemich/Salmon_stamp_report_2006-2011.pdf.

Whitefish season extension?

A public hearing is scheduled regarding FH-25-11, a rule proposal to extend the commercial whitefish season by six days. Under this rule proposal the season will close October 31 instead of October 25. The hearing will be held at the DNR Sturgeon Bay Service Center (110 S. Neenah Avenue) at 5 pm, Tuesday, January 17, 2012.

Electronic reporting of commercial catches.

Starting January 1, 2012, daily catch reports will be submitted electronically by Lake Superior commercial fishers using laptop computers. The electronic reporting system will be in place later in the year on Lake Michigan. The electronically-submitted data will be available immediately to Department biologists and wardens, so the Department will always have current information about harvests from both Lakes. The daily electronic reports will replace bi-weekly reports submitted on paper forms.

Biologists seek feedback on Lake Michigan salmon stocking

MADISON -- Five years after cutting the number of chinook stocked in Lake Michigan by 25 %, Wisconsin, Michigan, Illinois and Indiana are reviewing if the reduction worked and encouraging anglers to weigh in.

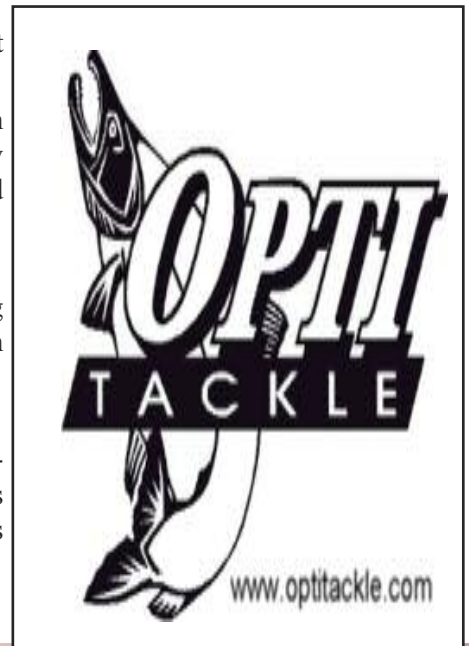

"We cut the lake-wide stocking quite a bit five years ago to better balance the trout and salmon out there with the available food supply. We said at that time we'd review how it worked," says Bill Horns, Great Lakes fisheries specialist for the Wisconsin DNR. "Anglers report that the Chinook and Coho they caught in 2011 were big and robust, so we're not hearing a lot of concern from anglers, but we want to follow through on the promise we made to revisit the issue."

Horns invites anglers to review information on the web about the Lake Michigan Stocking Strategies workshops and to email him at William.Horns@Wisconsin.gov or call at (608) 266-8782 with their feedback on how the stocking reductions worked and suggestions to guide future trout and salmon stocking on Lake Michigan.

Anglers also can attend a Lake Michigan Stocking Strategies conference being planned for next summer. Stocking decisions for 2013 and beyond will be based on the data presented and discussed at that public conference.

"So far, we've had a good cross-section of the angling public represented in limited workshops to scope out the process," says Brad Eggold, who supervises DNR's southern Lake Michigan fisheries team. "Now we want to reach out to more anglers to help us get ready for the public meeting this summer."

Written entries accepted by Feb. 1, 2012

MADISON – Amateur and professional photographers have until February 1, 2012, to submit their entries for the Wisconsin's Great Lakes photo contest, with winning images featured in a calendar handed out at the Wisconsin State Fair.

Sunken ship in Lake Michigan is named to National Register of Historic Places

SHEBOYGAN, Wis. — A Lake Michigan ship that sank in 1880 in southeastern Wisconsin has been named to the National Register of Historic Places.

The canaller Walter B. Allen sank in a storm in April 1880 about seven miles from Sheboygan. It's upright in about 170 feet of water.

"This ship is remarkably intact. It's one of the best preserved in Lake Michigan," said Jim Draeger, deputy state historic preservation officer at the Wisconsin Historical Society in Madison.

Putting the ship on the register will let the public know these kinds of ships exist in the Great Lakes and it also protects the property under state law, he told the Sheboygan Press (<http://shebpr.es/vzKed4>).

According to the society's Maritime Underwater Archaeology, the Walter B.

Allen was called a canaller because it was built to fit through the Welland Canal locks that connect Lake Erie and Lake Ontario, bypassing Niagara Falls.

It was built in 1866 and was the largest of the canaller class of schooners built on the Great Lakes. It typically shipped grain from Chicago to Buffalo or Oswego, N.Y., and then returned with coal.

It was while on the Chicago-to-Buffalo run, loaded with 19,000 bushels of grain, that it ran aground on April 11, 1880, on South Manitou Island at the north end of Lake Michigan in a storm.

Jim Draeger, of the Wisconsin Historical Society, says putting the ship on the register will let the public know these kinds of ships exist in the Great Lakes.

The ship lost its large anchor and mainsail. A tug from Manistee, Mich., came to help release her, and a steam pump, valued at $4,000, was placed on her deck to help her get to Milwaukee for repairs.

While in tow, a snowstorm pushed waves over the ship, filling her to the rail and extinguishing the fires of the pump, according to the state historical society. The ship sunk within 20 minutes. All aboard were rescued.

Draeger said the designation is also important because it educates the public about the importance of Great Lakes shipping to Wisconsin's history.

Mike Hansen, 45, the owner of Maritime Divers in Manitowoc said because of the ship's depth, no diver can reach it.

"Anything beyond 130 feet of water is considered a technical dive. It's not a dive that any diver can or should do. You have to have some specialized training," Hansen said.

He said the ship seems captured in time.

"It's a very pristine shipwreck," he said. "Until a couple years ago it was almost completely intact, until one of the masts fell over."
